Summer concerts, fests amp up drug screening, medical presence after last year's Molly deaths

Reuters

Sniffer dogs, pat-downs and other drug screening measures await concertgoers during the summer music festival season in the wake of 2013 concert deaths linked to the club drug Molly.

The four deaths in 2013 exposed widespread use of illegal stimulants at concerts, raves and electronic dance music shows, along with the difficulties encountered by organizers to keep those substances out.

"Drugs have always been a big part of the scene and always will be," said Amy Raves, a Los Angeles-based rave advocate who has attended dozens of electronic music shows. "The idea is how to promote safer raving, to educate kids that abstinence is the best policy, but to realize that's not always practical."

Organizers are taking no chances this year at events from Tennessee's Bonnaroo, a four-day music and arts festival that wrapped up Sunday, to Mysteryland in Bethel Woods, N.Y., the site of Woodstock in 1969, to Electric Zoo, a popular New York City electronic festival.

Electric Zoo organizers said their three-day event always has had a zero-tolerance drug policy, but this year's screening will be especially robust and will include drug searches and amnesty bins so drugs can be discarded anonymously.

"We are redoubling our efforts at the gate," said Dr. Andrew Bazos, medical supervisor for show organizer SFX Entertainment.

Last year, the final day of Electric Zoo was canceled when two concertgoers died after taking the drug Molly, a mashup of MDMA, the component in the drug Ecstasy, and unregulated synthetic stimulants. Molly deaths were also recorded in Washington, D.C., and Boston.

Experts say Molly use has ticked up in recent years as celebrities such as Madonna and Kanye West referenced the drug at their own concerts and Miley Cyrus sang about "dancing with Molly."

The Electric Zoo tragedy was a wake-up call to many in the rave and electronic community about the dangers of Molly and other club drugs, Bazos said.

"How to be healthy has unfortunately been related to what happened at Zoo last year," Bazos said.

The medical community continues to warn against the risks of so-called club drugs, saying the already dangerous substances become more potent when combined with warm temperatures, dehydration and exertion at all-day concerts.

"The message really should be 'Don't take drugs at all,'" said Dr. Harris Stratyner, an associate professor of psychiatry at Mount Sinai School of Medicine.

But it's unrealistic to urge total abstinence, some say. Amy Raves has started a Facebook community to offer advice on concert safety and health.

"I teach them the warning signs. What to look out for. To stay hydrated, to not over-heat," she said.

"These kids love Molly, they love Ecstasy. So I tell them to go get a test kit and shave a little off and make sure that's really what it is," she said.

DanceSafe, a health organization within the electronic music community, places information booths and volunteers at raves and festivals across the country. The group also provides "drug checking services" for Ecstasy users, its website says.

Complicating the efforts of concert organizers and sponsors is the Illicit Drug Anti-Proliferation Act of 2003, a federal law that can hold accountable any company, manager or individual who knowingly allows drug use on their premises.

Anti-drug posters, leaflets and broadcasts at raves and concerts could be tacit acknowledgment that drugs might be used at the venue, Amy Raves said.

"It's a terrible policy. You can't hand out fliers to people and say 'Here, this Ecstasy, this is what you're taking, please be careful,'" she said.

A robust medical presence also can be expected this summer, with medical tents, doctors, nurses and EMTs on hand. Concertgoers are encouraged to report anyone who might be suffering from an overdose, exhaustion or other health issue.

Women have right to bear breasts

Nikki Lynette
» @NikkiLynette

When Rihanna went topless on the cover of the French magazine Lui in April, she posted the image to Instagram and her account was suspended. This month, she was criticized for the sheer dress she wore to the CFDA Fashion Awards. And recently, an ad for her Rogue perfume featuring RiRi covering her bare chest with her arms has been restricted in the U.K. because it apparently is too sexually explicit for children.

It's official ... breasts are the devil. Since Lina Esco made the movie "Free The Nipple" last year, the whole female toplessness thing has been the subject of plenty debate. Rihanna was not the only celeb to bare her boobs; even Miley Cyrus and Scout Willis are repping openly for Team #FreeTheNipple. And why shouldn't they? Why is it that a man's bare chest is acceptable while a woman's is inherently pornographic? Boobs feed babies, how unwholesome can they be?

And the scrutiny isn't just coming from men: Women throw way more shade at each other. I learned that the hard way in fifth grade when a group of flat-chested girls cornered me in the hallway to confront me over their belief that I stuffed my bra. They were so sure I was faking it that one of the girls actually poked my boob. Hard. In front of everybody. The look of shock on her face when she realized she'd just touched titty meat was priceless. As far as I'm concerned, that counts as my first and only lesbian experience.

Do guys have similar experiences of having their bodies sexualized? What's the male equivalent of having your fourth-grade teacher pull you aside before recess to inform you that it's time to start wearing a bra? What's the boy version of getting unwanted attention while doing jumping jacks in gym class? That stuff affected my big-breasted self all the way until 2011, when my stylist, Marta, forced me to go braless for a photoshoot. Being in front of a camera without a bra? Oh no! I didn't realize I had a stigma about my boobs until I had to confront it. I'm glad I did.

If there is one thing that I don't love about being female, it's the fact that we are expected to be aware constantly of how our bodies are perceived by others. Are you showing lots of cleavage? People might think you're easy. Are you too fat? People might find you unattractive. Are you too thin? People might think you're on drugs. Breastfeeding a baby can get you a ticket for indecent exposure in some places, while dudes with the jiggiest man-boobs can bounce around topless without a care in the world.

American women are warned that revealing outfits are unsafe while reports of sexual assault are on the rise in some countries where women legally are required to cover themselves. At what point do we accept the truth: Our bodies are not the problem; the world's attitude toward them is the problem.

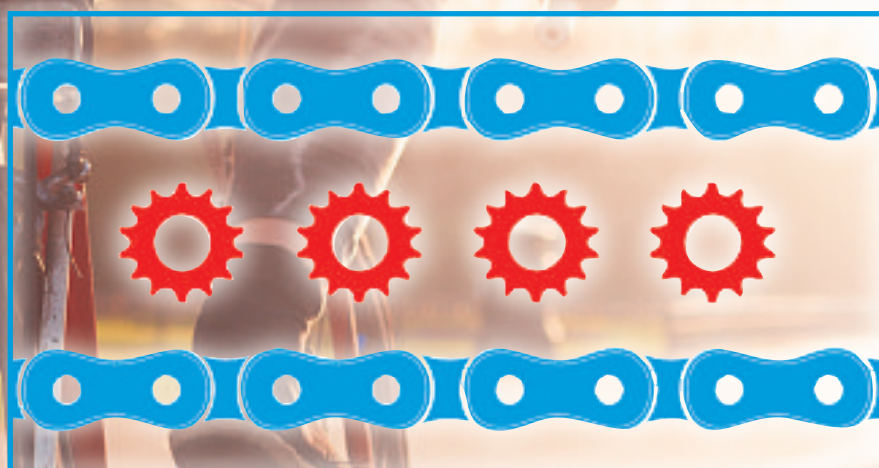

I can't say nipple freedom is something I'm particularly passionate about. I just think anything that inspires dialogue about women's rights is badass. So if I ever decide to become a hashtag feminist, I'll probably campaign against the oppression of the well-endowed female in the form of hating on camel toe. I even have the catchy hashtag all figured out: #FreeTheToe.

Some Chicagoans are cutting out cars to save on costs

By Rachel Cromidas | REDEYE

After a crash totaled Erica Johnson's car, she decided owning a car in Chicago was no longer worth the hassle.

Johnson, 26, of Norwood Park, used to drive to her job, but now she bikes 4 miles to work in Mayfair or takes a CTA bus when the weather is bad, she said. She's saving at least $250 a month on car expenses, she estimates.

"Instead of continuing to go through the hassle of paying for insurance and finding parking, I decided I would just go without it," she said. "I've loved it ever since."

Chicago is making it easier for commuters like Johnson to make that choice.

Last year, the Chicago Department of Transportation announced it would prioritize pedestrians, public transit and cyclists above motorists when designing its infrastructure. Since then, the city has added miles of new protected bike lanes, has pushed to dedicate entire road lanes for bus rapid transit and is now hosting a slew of events during Chicago Bike Week, which began Friday, to encourage more people to bike commute.

Earlier this year the Active Transportation Alliance, one of the city's most influential transportation advocacy organizations, asked the city to consider even more projects that would eat into road space for cars. Although the city still hasn't formally responded, Amanda Woodall, director of planning at the ATA, said the changes align with CDOT's values.

"The concept behind car-free streets is really getting into the idea that we don't need our communities to be dominated by automobiles in order to be successful," she said. "This is a way to engage public space for economic activity, social activity and enjoyment by the community in general."

Woodall cited a plaza in Lincoln Square, on Lincoln Avenue between Western Avenue and Leland Street, that has been blocked off to cars, as a prime example.

"It's one of the most vibrant places that you will ever visit, always filled with families, people walking around, some of them out shopping, and some of them are there as a way to be social and participate in their community."

But critics of infrastructure proposals that could eat into road space for cars worry the streets will become less safe and more congested, not better.

Lauren Neal, 29, of Lincoln Park, rides the CTA to her job in the Loop, but uses her car to visit her family in Winnetka and tote her golden retriever around town—a convenience she has no plans of giving up, she said. But she often worries about cyclists behaving aggressively when she crosses their paths.

"I've had people slam their hand on my car," Neal said. "Even as a pedestrian, I've almost bumped into a biker because they haven't stopped at a stop."

Last month, a cyclist punched her side mirror as he passed her car, which was momentarily waiting in a bicycle lane on Clybourn Avenue, she said. "I don't know why that is anything he thought was appropriate."

The city's project to transform its streets will hinge on residents with all kinds of transportation habits sharing the road, particularly as more people decide to leave their cars at home.

Duncan Lawson, 24, of Lakeview, ditched his car last July when he got a job downtown and no longer needed to commute to Deerfield. The unexpected costs of owning a car in Chicago, like city stickers and parking tickets, couldn't justify the ease of getting around town, he said.

"You kind of have to look at the whole picture," he said. "The tradeoff is you don't have to worry about parking your car illegally and getting a ticket, or fighting for a parking spot, or the stress of having to drive in traffic every day."

The real test of his first year living car-free in Chicago, he said, came during last winter's harsh temperatures, when he had to wait on the Red Line platform at Belmont for a delayed train.

"Those few days were not very fun, but that comes with the territory when you're relying on public transportation to get around," he said.

Public transit advocates say that while Chicago is no Copenhagen, a city known for its pedestrian friendly layout and low traffic fatality rates, it is poised to reduce car use even further with the expansion of Divvy, the city's year-old bikeshare program, and the advent of rideshare companies like Uber X and Lyft.

Although Norwood Park's Johnson appreciates the alternative transportation options available to her, she believes the city still has a long way to connect its neighborhoods for people without cars, particularly when it comes to cyclists, she said.

"There aren't a lot of Divvy stations up by where I live, so that's super inconvenient," she said. "I think we are moving toward being more bike friendly, but we're still not there. People still don't know the laws and how to share the road."

RCROMIDAS@TRIBUNE.COM | @RACHELCROMIDAS

MAKE IT WORK

Cities around the country have taken some streets designed for car traffic and either made room for other modes of transit or closed them off to cars entirely. Some well-known examples include:

- » The 16th Street Mall in Denver
- » The Nicollet Mall in Minneapolis
- » Select Bus Service in New York City, which has created dedicated bus lanes on roads where cars and buses used to share a lane, in the Bronx, Harlem and elsewhere.
- » Concrete barrier-protected bike lanes in Manhattan and Brooklyn, N.Y.

Chicago's Department of Transportation has plans to install more than 116 protected bike lanes by Spring 2015. When finished, the city will have at least:

32 MILES

of barrier-protected bike lanes

81 MILES

of buffered bike lanes

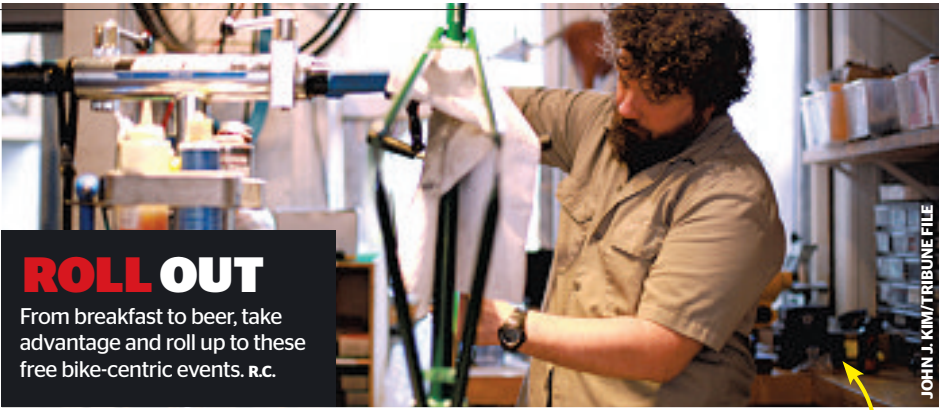

2.75 MILES

of neighborhood greenways

Chicago-area drivers are facing gas prices averaging $4.11 a gallon, about 18 cents higher than a month ago.

Nathan Huynh, 18, from Chicago, opens a hidden cash envelope after pulling it off of a pole behind Crabbby Kim's bar in North Center on Sunday. Inside the envelope was $40 cash and a note asking the finder to post a selfie. STACEY WESCOTT/TRIBUNE

Friends find $370 in hidden cash

Chicago Tribune

When Chicago residents Nathan Huynh and Tina Tran woke up Sunday morning, they did what they've been doing every morning for the past week: They checked Twitter for the latest hidden cash clues.

Around 10 a.m., the two found what they said was their sixth cash-filled envelope, this one taped to a pole in an alleyway behind Crabbby Kim's Bikini Bar in North Center.

The $40 prize was left by @Clue_King, one of several anonymous social media users who in recent weeks have been hiding envelopes of cash in major U.S. cities. Since June 8, the friends, both 18, have collected $370.

"It seems kind of impossible ... but when we got the first one it was kind of easy," Huynh said. "It's been fun. We actually learned more about Chicago this way."

Huynh said they learned about the hidden-cash craze last weekend when people behind the Twitter account @HiddenCash left envelopes all over San Francisco and other cities.

California real estate investor Jason Buzi said in a recent CNN interview that he is one of several people behind @HiddenCash. Others unaffiliated with that account have helped spread the trend across the country.

About 20 envelopes containing a total of $1,500 were sprinkled across Millennium Park and Oz Park on Sunday, the account user told the Tribune in an email.

Peotone resident Fernando Fernandez

MORE CASH

Posts from the @HiddenCash account indicated on Twitter that more envelopes could be hidden in Chicago on Monday.

found one of those envelopes underneath a bench by the Cloud Gate sculpture, also known as the Bean. It contained $60.

Fernandez said he made the 45-minute drive north to Chicago just to find an envelope.

"I thought I got to try and come out," he said. "There were tons of people out there looking for the envelopes."

Fernandez and others said they planned to "pay it forward" with their cash prizes.

While Huynh and Tran said they might use some of the money for college expenses—starting this fall, Huynh will attend the University of Illinois at Chicago and Tran is going to the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign—they said they plan to give away some of their winnings to homeless people in the Uptown neighborhood.

Jill Mueller, 28, of Chicago said she planned to share her $50 prize with a friend who she said could use the money.

"I was kind of shocked, like, 'Oh, I actually got one,'" said Mueller, who found a @Clue_King envelope in a RedEye news rack near her home in North Center. "I know the whole point behind it is to pay it forward, which is a nice message also."

College with no loans?

Under plan, students wouldn't have to pay up front

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

A bill on Gov. Quinn's desk could set the stage for Illinois colleges to let students attend without paying tuition or taking on student loans.

The bill would task the Illinois Student Assistance Commission to study a "Pay it Forward" program, similar to proposals in Oregon, Pennsylvania and elsewhere.

State Sen. Mike Frerichs (D-Champaign) described the bill as "self-sustaining" and said it would "allow students to pay off their college education without having set loans or set payments."

"If we have a whole generation of students coming out and not establishing themselves and not starting families, that's a brake on our economy," Frerichs said.

MCREPEAU@TRIBUNE.COM | @CREPEAU

HERE'S HOW THINGS COULD SHAKE OUT

How would a "Pay it Forward" plan work?

Proposals vary—there are several states with "Pay it Forward" bills in various stages of the legislative process, according to the National Association for College Admissions Counseling. The general idea is that students would not have to pay for college upfront or take out student loans. Instead, they would sign a contract promising to pay back a certain percentage of their postgraduate income for a set number of years.

Would this apply to private schools as well, or just public universities?

The program would apply to public universities, though Frerichs said if it is successful, private colleges may decide to implement similar programs.

So, is this actually going to happen?

Right now, the bill has passed both houses of the General Assembly, but has not yet been signed by Gov. Quinn. "That bill is currently under review for a decision on whether we will sign it," Quinn spokesman David Blanchette said.

Will the program automatically start if Quinn signs it?

No. If signed into law, the bill would task the Illinois Student Assistance Commission to study the issue and present a report by December. Frerichs and others originally wanted the bill to create a "Pay it Forward" pilot program, but it was amended due to budget concerns.

Legendary 'Top 40' DJ Casey Kasem dies at 82

5 GIG HARBOR, Wash. Casey Kasem, the longtime radio host of "American Top 40," died Sunday at 82, according to his daughter Kerri.

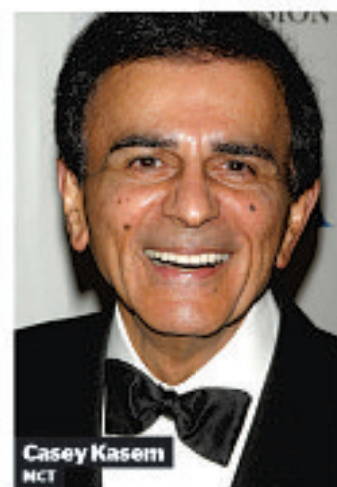

"Early this Father's Day morning, our dad Casey Kasem passed away surrounded by family and friends," Kerri said in a Facebook post. "Even though we know he is in a better place and no longer suffering, we are heartbroken. Thank you for all your love, support and prayers."

Kerri's publicist Danny Deraney said Kasem died at 3:23 a.m. Sunday at St. Anthony Hospital in Gig Harbor, Wash. He said members of the family were with him at the time of his death.

Deraney said Kasem's wife Jean, who has been battling his children from his first marriage over medical care, was "still in Los Angeles, as far as I know."

Kasem also was the voice of Shaggy in the "Scooby-Doo" cartoons and one of the most recognizable voices on American radio. Kasem suffered from Lewy body disease, a form of dementia with symptoms similar to Parkinson's disease and hallucinations.

Kasem, whose final years were marked by dementia and a battle between his children and his second wife over his welfare, last week was placed in "comfort-oriented care" in a Washington hospital after a judge approved his daughter's request to do so.

He was receiving pain medication, but not food or water, after Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Daniel Murphy determined that feeding him would have been detrimental to his health.

"Keep your feet on the ground and keep reaching for the stars," Kasem, a Detroit-born Lebanese-American, told millions of listeners at the end of his invariably cheery weekly radio program, which ran from 1970 to 2009.

On his syndicated show, Kasem counted down the 40 most popular songs of the week. At its peak, Kasem's show was heard on more than 1,000 stations in about 50 countries.

General appointed to investigate Bergdahl case

6 The U.S. military has appointed a two-star general to investigate the circumstances under which Bowe Bergdahl, the U.S. soldier recently freed after five years in Taliban captivity, disappeared in eastern Afghanistan in 2009, a U.S. official said Sunday.

U.S. increases Iraq embassy security

7 The U.S. is beefing up security at its embassy in Baghdad and will evacuate some workers out of the Iraqi capital, the State Department said Sunday. The move comes as Sunni insurgents seized a city in northwestern Iraq on Sunday after heavy fighting, solidifying their grip on the north.

Obama intervenes to end transit strike

8 President Obama on Saturday intervened to end a transit strike in the greater Philadelphia area, establishing an emergency board to force the two sides to negotiate. The move came hours after about 440 engineers and electricians who operate trains that connect Philadelphia and its suburbs walked off the job.

Pakistan launches army operation

9 Pakistan sent troops, artillery and helicopter gunships to the North Waziristan region Sunday just a week after a deadly attack on the country's biggest airport. Taliban and ethnic Uzbek fighters holed up in North Waziristan both have claimed responsibility for the June 8 commando-style attack on Karachi's airport.

THE DIGIT

16,300 Nine countries still had a total of 16,300 nuclear warheads in early 2014—down by around 5.6 percent from the previous year—of which some 4,000 were operational, the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute think-tank said in its annual report Monday.

2014 FIFA World Cup

The United States passes legislation legalizing marijuana nationwide. In Chicago, the CTA announces plans for an all-electric bus fleet by the end of the decade. The U.S. team is short on players after a round of drug testing to qualify for the Iraq-hosted World Cup.

FUTURE OF U.S. SOCCER LOOKS A LITTLE ROUGH

GIVE 'EM 44 YEARS

By Mick Swasko | REDEYE

We hate to be pessimists, but let's face it: The other football just isn't America's sport.

As the U.S. opens its World Cup schedule Monday against Ghana (5 p.m. ESPN), we may be reminded of that again shortly.

In fact, we predict it is going to be a while before the U.S. makes it out of group play again. We gazed into the future to see how long it will take the Americans to get anywhere in the World Cup. REDEYE ILLUSTRATION

The Spire is fully funded, built and completely occupied. The U.S. team is swiftly eliminated in host country Russia.

2050

Chicago becomes the first city on Earth to be 100-percent powered by solar and wind energy. The CTA announces plans to rehabilitate the Wilson stop. The U.S. team goes absolutely nowhere in the World Cup hosted on Google's recently established island nation in the Pacific Ocean.

2046

The U.S. soccer team stuns the globe ahead of the World Cup with a vastly improved team. Despite this, a manned mission to destroy an asteroid on a collision course with Earth delays the games, which were to be held in Canada.

2054

The Cubs, having moved back to Chicago, reach a deal with rooftop owners and win the World Series. The U.S. soccer team, led by a near-perfect genetic clone of David Beckham, does not exit the group play held in Nauru.

2030

The Blackhawks reach the Stanley Cup Final, the Bears get to the Super Bowl, the Bulls play the Heat for the championship and the White Sox compete for the World Series. Each team wins. Despite the World Cup being hosted by Chicago and the U.S., America fails to exit group play.

2022

North West and Blue Ivy Carter release their first single together. Despite it being the theme song to the Qatar-hosted World Cup, the U.S. fails to score a single goal.

2034

The first manned mission to Mars is complete. In the same year, Mayor Kanye West announces every pothole in Chicago has been repaired. In the newly democratic North Korea, the U.S. team does not win a single match.

2038

Divvy launches the first citywide hover-bike share program in Chicago, and the CTA announces it has scrapped plans for electric buses. The U.S. soccer team—though promising—fails to advance in the World Cup hosted in a vastly warmer Republic of Antarctica.

2042

The Naperville Cubs reach the World Series against the Milwaukee Micro-Brewers, and lose in Game 7. The U.S. team cannot adjust to the gravity differences in World Cup group play held in the Picard Crater Dome on the moon.

Sears buys back the Willis Tower, and installs a set of stilts, again making it the tallest building in the world. In U.S.-hosted World Cup play, the U.S. takes on England in the championship match at Soldier Field. A crowd of 729,452 pack the hover seats installed around the stadium and witness the U.S.' first World Cup victory.

VERY PUNNY

Our panelists can't resist a bad pun. But it's a Monday, so we're Ghana give them a break.

1	What have we learned after one weekend of the World Cup?	"Spain's embarrassment is complete." X	Don't mess with the Dutch! #hashtag #TheSpanishDemolition	Sex weakens legs, right, Spain?	People from Europe, Asia and Africa party a whole hell of a lot harder than Americans.	That Robin Van Persie is Dutch for "Amazing at Soccer."
2	Let's have your U.S.-Ghana prediction.	We're Ghana williiiiin.	The U.S. is Ghana be in for a rough ride! #Hashtag #WorldCupPuns!	I had Ghana in college. Went to the health center, got lotion and it went away in 10 days.	The U.S. is caught so off-guard that everyone from Ghana speaks English, it consumes their brains and they lose 4-0.	3-1, win by the Africans. Regardless it's Ghana be a good one!
3	"Ole Ole Ole" is to the World Cup as the chicken dance is to suburban weddings.	... #hashtags are to World Cup puns, jokes and snarky comments!	WTH? Really? Stop it!	... "Bleeeerghhh! Ahhh! Will someone hold my hair back?" is to the Wrigleyville bar scene at 2 a.m.	... Vuvuzelas were in 2010. The most interesting thing for non-soccer fans.
4	The NHL offseason is here. What are the Blackhawks thinking?	Fishing. Drinking. Fishing. Girls. Fishing.	#BringBackTheCup	Why did it take the Kings so long to close out the Rangers?!	"I sure hope Corey is going to work on some hand-eye coordination exercises this summer ..."	Reloading and getting ready for the next Stanley Cup! You gotta believe!
5	What should Derrick Rose say to Carmelo Anthony when he hits free agency?	"Meet me at Malnati's."	"#RunWithTheBulls"	"Can you suggest a cool gas station for me to work, or do I need to call Steve Perry formerly of Journey?"	"Can I have your knees since you never use them properly?"	"I've got your back, and we'll teach you to play defense! Let's go!"

ODDS ARE ...

Two high-profile sports-betting sites both say the Blackhawks have the highest odds to win the 2015 Stanley Cup. Their odds are 15-2 (Bovada) and 7-1 (TopBet) to win. The Bruins, Penguins and Kings have the next best odds. This year, the Penguins were favored to win, but the Kings won it all Friday.

Cubs start pitcher trade talks

The Cubs are reportedly in trade talks with several teams about two of their starting pitchers: Jeff Samardzija (right) and Jason Hammel (left). The Mariners, Blue Jays and Braves all have been speculated landing spots for each pitcher.

Spurs are the champions

The Spurs are champions once again, a 104-87 victory over the Heat in Game 5 of the Finals giving them a fifth title and presumably soothing much of the hurt that had lingered since San Antonio fell short in soul-crushing fashion last year in the final two games against the same team on the same stage.

Ghana favored over U.S.

The United States faces Ghana on Monday in their first match in the 2014 FIFA World Cup. Andre Ayew, a Ghana midfielder, says the match will be tough, but he fully expects his team to beat the U.S.A. "If we are fit and we are all 100 percent there is no way that we aren't going to win this game," Ayew said. Here's hoping he's wrong.

As two dudes road trip to California with a feisty girl named Haley, “The Signal” at first resembles a long-awaited remake of 1989’s “The Wizard.” (Which I know is never actually going to happen.) Then the MIT students bust out the computers and fly through lines of coding like they’re interviewing for a job at Facebook in “The Social Network.” THEN, an attempt to track down a pesky hacker lands Nic (Brenton Thwaites of the upcoming “The Giver”) in a secretive facility, where Damon (Laurence Fishburne), explains that Nic and his pals may have been contaminated by aliens. And the movie sorta turns into “Chronicle.”

What “The Signal” (also the title of a better, unrelated 2007 movie) never becomes is more than a showcase for director/co-writer William Eubank to flex his muscles. Some of the shots are impressive, even gorgeous. But technical skill turns into showing off when the story fails to keep up. A couple of attempts at twists are almost laughable, though no more so than the ultra-serious/unintentionally funny moment of Damon pulling a gun from an otherwise empty briefcase. Looking a little like a young Colin Farrell, Thwaites, given a lot more to do than in the terrible “Maleficent,” carries the movie just fine, but he’s running in place—from forehead-smacking behavior (just because someone is young doesn’t mean they’re dumb enough to sneak into a creepy house at night while leaving their girlfriend alone in the car to frustrating outbursts in the research building he’s not allowed to leave.

Director Gareth Edwards followed the lower-budget “Monsters” with the impressive “Godzilla.” I’d like to see what Eubank could do with more money and a better script. No one watching “The Signal” will care about the relationship between Nic and Haley or what happens to Nic’s pal Jonah (Beau Knapp). Everything bit of action is in service of the big moment meant to blow your mind.

Alas, you touch your head and discover your mind remains intact and largely unstimulated.

ROMANCE PLANET

BY JENNIFER SHEPHERD | READ MORE AT LIPSTICKMYSTIC.COM

Gemini May 21-June 21
With two planets boosting your firepower, you should find it easy to land a hot date or two. This is a great time to connect with people who are fascinating, attractive and intelligent.

Cancer June 22-July 22
Someone might need more of your attention right now. Venus is reminding you that your honey could be going through a rough time, and he or she could use some extra cuddling and sensual touch. Don't just stay obsessed with your own problems.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
A moon opposition could leave you feeling a little low. Recharge your batteries by getting together with a good friend and sharing a few laughs. Or visit some family members you haven't seen for a while. Soak up some positive energy.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
With Mercury still retrograde, don't make any sudden moves. If you've met somebody cool, don't rush things. You might need more time before you can fully evaluate this person's energy and personality.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23
You could be pulled into the past this week, even if you don't want to be. Maybe you still need to resolve child custody issues with an ex. Or maybe you simply have some intense feelings about a former flame and need healing.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21
Venus is still opposite your sign, and this means that you need to keep working on improving yourself. If you can let go of toxic energies or unhealthy habits, you'll be in a much better position to fully enjoy true love.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Two planets are making it harder for you to remain positive. Try not to panic. Even if you can't see what the future holds just now, you'll sort it out before too long. In the meantime, don't put a lot of pressure on your romantic partner.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're doing a lot of soul searching these days, thanks to Jupiter. It's important for you to figure out what you really want to do with your life. And you need a romantic partner who truly shares your hopes and dreams. Keep working at it.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your mind is buzzing this week as Mercury is increasing your mental powers. You could deliver a lecture to your honey about politics, sex or religion. Or you might be inspired to make a post in your blog or a rant on your Facebook page.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
The sun is moving into a friendly sign, and this will improve your mood. You'll feel more hopeful about life and love. This is a great time to make a fresh start and leave anything unpleasant behind you.

Aries March 21-April 19
You could experience a few false starts as the moon makes things complicated. Maybe you've been trying to arrange a hot date, but the two of you keep having schedule conflicts. Be patient.

Taurus April 20-May 20
You'll have a chance to play adviser when a friend or coworker turns to you for advice about love. The sun is giving you some unique insights into that person's situation. Share your ideas and be supportive.

Tegan & Sara

Tegan & Sara have arrived

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis Gomez

 lgomez@tribune.com
 @TribLuis

There are the Tegan and Sara fans who have been listening to the Canadian twins since they debuted with a folksy sound in 1999. And then there are those who became fans in the past year or two thanks to Tegan and Sara's radio-friendly dance hit "Closer" and "Everything Is Awesome," their catchy theme song with The

Lonely Island for "The Lego Movie."

Tegan and Sara Quin don't mind the newcomers. Most artists wouldn't. But those longtime fans who were drawn to the band's indie appeal? Well, you can guess how some of them took the slight change in direction and fan base.

"When the first single came out, the die-hards online were like, 'Why did you do this, blah, blah, blah?'" Tegan said by phone recently. "People are going to complain. It doesn't matter what you do. You don't want to alienate your audience when you make a record, but you also don't want to bore the audience and make the same thing."

"We tried to find a balance but took risks with [our latest album] 'Heartthrob' to increase the fan base. But more than anything, we wanted to inspire ourselves. It's interesting to see the increase. There are a lot more teenagers, more girls. The thing that is most exciting is that it gives the band new life."

That's not to say Tegan and Sara, who will perform Tuesday and Wednesday at The Vic, were struggling to find an audience pre-"Heartthrob." They released six studio albums before that, and their 2004 single "Walking With a Ghost" received radio play (The White Stripes went on to cover the song on their "Walking With a Ghost" EP a year later).

"We were really happy," Tegan said of the band's state of mind before "Heartthrob." "It's not like one morning we said, 'We have to be huge rock stars.'"

Tegan insists they still haven't reached that status. She says they play for around the same number of people and make about the same amount of money as they did before the album came out. Nevermind that "Heartthrob" debuted at No. 3 on the Billboard 200, their highest debut to date. Or that they recorded a song for Oreo's Wonderfilled ad campaign.

In August, the sisters performed "Closer" with one of the biggest acts in music today, Taylor Swift, at her Los Angeles concert. They'll open for another world famous female artist, Katy Perry, on her "Prismatic" tour later this year. Sure, Tegan and Sara and the "Dark Horse" singer don't exactly share the same audience, but it wouldn't be the first time they've dealt with this type of challenge.

"When Paramore asked us to tour with them [in 2010], Sara was worried that they were too mainstream and the audience wouldn't like us and that what we do, our indie [sound], wasn't what they wanted," Tegan said. "She was self-conscious. Me, I was like, 'Their audience loves a female-fronted act. And Hayley [Williams] is outspoken. We will fit in.' It ended up being amazing. It did wonders for us."

What sort of effect will the Perry tour have on their careers? That remains to be seen. But if Tegan and Sara's popularity has peaked (and it probably hasn't), Tegan still would be thrilled with the run they've had.

"If this is it, I'd be pretty satisfied," Tegan said. "We've traveled all over the world and done way more than I thought we'd do. We've exceeded our expectations. Even our parents said, 'We really did not think you would be this popular.'"

Baby news

Kelly Clarkson announced Saturday the June 12 birth of daughter River Rose, according to Us Magazine. River is the first child for the "American Idol" alum and hubby Brandon Blackstock. In other baby news, North West, daughter of Kim Kardashian and Kanye West, celebrated her first birthday Sunday.

Kanye West didn't just play the Bonnaroo Music Festival on Friday. His return to the Manchester, Tenn., event, six years after his disastrous debut, included West airing some grievances about how he was mistreated the last time ("They had '[bleep] Kanye' on the [bleeping] port-a-potties!") as well as some classic rants about how great he is ("Shakespeare ain't nothin'. You gotta dream to achieve these realness because we're rolling like Napoleon up in here ...") and, finally, a scolding of the press ("They try to make me look crazy."). Nope, you do that all by yourself, Mr. West.

HE'S ALL THAT

My mom would say it was a blessing, because it means you never have to wonder if guys are only interested in you because you've got boobs. I would have been thrilled if guys were interested in me because of my boobs!"

—Anna Kendrick, telling Elle magazine that she hasn't been hit on by a guy since 2009

Wedding race

Eve and new hubby Maximillion Cooper didn't race to the altar, but they did get married Saturday in Ibiza, Spain, because of the Gumball 3000 motor car rally. The couple met at the 2010 rally, which Cooper co-founded in 1999. This year's rally ended on the same day as their wedding, according to E! News.
